READY AND ABLE

The Texas Rangers as an organization dates from the spring of 1836. After the fall of the Alamo, General Sam Houston organized among the settlers in the territory a troop of sixteen hundred mounted riflemen. This company, formed for the defense of the Texas borders, was the original Texas Ranger Unit. During the seven years that Texas had to maintain her independence, before she was admitted into the American Union, the rangers had a lot of work to do.

They repelled the Mexicans, fought the Apaches, Comanches, and Kowas, and administered justice to the outlaws and ruffians who flocked to the new republic. When the Civil War broke out between the North and South, Texas was drawn into the conflict on the side of the Confederacy. General Con Terry, an old ranger, organized the famous body of men known as Terry's Texas Rangers. This command was composed almost exclusively of ex-rangers and frontiersmen. From Bull Run to Appomattox, this organization rendered gallant service and lost seventy-five per cent of its original muster roll.

The return of peace and the days of reconstruction did not do away with the necessity for the service which only the ranger could render. Indian uprisings, banditry, and cattle thievery all flourished. From 1868 to 1873 the ranger companies were gradually reduced from one thousand to about three hundred men.

In 1874 conditions along the frontier had become so acute that the need for an organized mounted police for the protection of the settlers against the continued Indian raids became apparent. Early in 1874, the legislature appropriated the sum of $300,000 for frontier defence, thus authorizing the formation of the Texas Rangers as now constituted. The governor immediately issued a call for four hundred and fifty volunteers. They were formed into six companies of seventy-five men each. Each of these units was designated A, B, C, D, E, and F and received the official name of the Frontier Battalion of Texas Rangers.

On this particular day, Company A, being the northernmost company, was camped on the main fork of the Brazos River. Captain John Lane was in command of the unit and was seated on a small chair in his tent. In front of him was a packing case which served as a desk. The flap of his tent moved aside and Ranger Jim Nevins appeared.

"He's here, captain," was the announcement. "The men are giving him the once over. Why he's nothing more than a kid. From what I heard I thought Al Caswell was something of a giant and about twice the age."

"Don't let appearances fool you, Jim," suggested Captain Lane. "When a fellow can out think a red-skin, then there's something mighty powerful inside his head. He doesn't just use it as a place to park his hat. I borrowed him from unit E for a special job. Now bring him to me."

Al Caswell was at that time a dark-eyed, dark-haired youngster whose youthful age was anybody's guess. The broad-brimmed white hat upon his head, the heavy-buckled cartridge studded belt that carried the six shooter on his hip, and the shop made boots on his feet were the hallmarks of his trade. He had a friendly smile and you liked him at once.

The original Ranger regulation for guns was the .50 caliber Sharps carbine and one .45 Colt's pistol. Later the .44 Winchester carbine was to be used in place of the Sharps. Al Caswell had purchased with his own funds one of the new Winchesters and had it on the right side of his horse in a scabbard, and on the left side in another scabbard, his Sharps.

"Reporting for duty, captain," was all that the youthful Ranger said when he entered the tent.

"I have a warrant here for the arrest of Hank Carling. Charge is taking some stock from the IT ranch. I want him arrested and brought here alive. We figured that such action would make the rest of the rustlers associated with him nervous. If you kill him, that ruins our plans. If he kills you, we lose a good man. Understand?"

"Yes." was the one word reply.

"You start tomorrow morning," explained Captain Lane. "You may take any Ranger with you from my unit."

"I'll take the fellow who sort of announced my arrival," smiled Al Caswell. "It ought to be an experience for him. We ride at dawn."

The sun was just up from the horizon the next day when the two men left the Ranger camp. Their destination was the small town of Hogarsville where it was rumored Hank Carling made his headquarters. The two men rode north with hardly a word passing between them. The trip lasted three days and early at noon of the fourth day approached their destination.

"You wait for me on the outskirts of the town," said Al Caswell to his companion Ranger. "This has to be a single man job. No matter what happens, just stay put. I'll be back before sundown with Hank Carling."

Al Caswell rode into town alone. He tied his horse loosely to a hitching post near a stable. Then he walked the distance on foot to The Palace. He entered and spoke to the bartender loudly.

"I'm looking for Hank Carling. You can see plainly I am a Texas Ranger. I have a warrant for his arrest. No need to create a disturbance here. Just tell me where I can find him. It all should be done peacefully."

Three men nearby almost didn't believe the words they heard. The bartender looked at the youthful appearance of the Texas Ranger. He moved a glass backwards and that was a signal. One of the three men left and entered a back room. Soon from it came the wanted man himself. In his hand he held a .45 colt which he inched right up to the spine of Al Caswell.

"Don't turn around," he suggested. "You can feel the muzzle. You walk right out of here. But first I'll take your gun. Don't be a fool and try anything. From what they tell me, you certainly must be one big fool coming here and announcing yourself the way you did."

Finishing those words, Hank Carling removed with his left hand the gun that the ranger carried. It was a beautifully carved weapon. He replaced his own gun in the holster and now held Caswell's sixgun.

"I'm going to walk you to where your horse is. Then get out of town pronto. Otherwise you might force me to shoot you with your own gun. I run things here so don't think you will be able to get any help."

The two men walked slowly to where Caswell's horse had been hitched. Hank Carling spotted the two rifles in the scabbards.

"I'll remove those weapons also," he said.

"Can I turn around for just a minute," asked the Ranger. "There is something I must tell you. It is very important and might save your life."

Carling was curious. He figured he had nothing to lose so he told the Ranger to turn around. The muzzle of the gun was now levelled at the stomach.

"Listen carefully to what I have to say," said the Ranger in a stern tone of voice that contrasted with the way he previously had spoken. "You hold my gun in your hand. It has six empty shells in the chambers. You have the gun cocked. Pull the trigger and nothing will happen. But if you look carefully at the right hand you will see a deringer. How did it get there? A trick holster attached to my hand. It shoots a .50 caliber bullet. That will tear a big hole in you. Don't try to go for your gun. But pull the trigger and be convinced."

The startled man didn't know what to do. The confidence with which the Ranger had spoken completely unnerved him. Finally he pulled the trigger and heard the firing pin strike an empty shell.

"You got me, but how are you going to get me out of town?" he challenged.

"Simple," was the reply. "We are here at the stable. You will ask for a horse. Hold that gun in your hand as though I am still your prisoner. Then we ride out together. My partner is waiting for me."

Hank Carling obeyed and followed orders. On the outskirts of Hogarsville, they met the other Ranger. The prisoner was disarmed. The ride back to headquarters was uneventful. To save his own hide, Hank Carling talked all about his operations.

"What brains that Ranger has," he admitted. "But he did take a chance. Suppose I had not held his gun but my own. What then?"

Captain John Lane also wanted to know the answer to that question. And Al Caswell gave it to him.

"I took that possibility into consideration," he explained. "I wore a heavy shirt. Why? Because around my body was a thick steel vest that could stop a bullet."

"Shows you a Ranger is prepared for anything," conceded Captain John Lane.

LEO ROSS SAW THE GUNS COVERING HIM AS HE PUMPED PUNCHES INTO THE BIG CATTLEMAN!

THE FARMER'S ALL RIGHT, ONCE HE GETS STARTED!

BEFORE HE REACHED THE FLOOR OF THE DARK VALLEY LANE FELT EYES FOLLOWING HIM, UNSEEN AND WATCHFUL!

HOLD IT! GET HIS GUN, JUDAH! THIS IS FORBIDDEN VALLEY, STRANGER! YOU SHOULD NEVER HAVE ENTERED!
